LAFOLLETTE LEADS TICKET BUT BLAINE FOLLOWS CLOSE AND ELECTION OF TICKET PRACTICALLY ASSURED

(By Associated Press)

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 6—United States Senator Robert M. LaFollette is almost 150,000 votes ahead of his opponent, Wm. A. Ganfield for the Republican senatorial nomination. Reports of 1859 precincts out of 2523 in Wisconsin show LaFollette 250,134; Ganfield 102,242.

Governor John J. Blaine leads Attorney General Morgan by more than 124,000 in 1853 precincts out of 2523 for the Republican gubernatorial nomination. These precincts give Blaine 232,927 and Morgan 108,875.

Reports from all over the state indicate the Democratic vote to have been exceptionally light, but the chances appeared to be in favor of their polling enough votes to get their names on the ballot for the general election in November. MAKING THE WEATHER

Among all the forces that combine to drive the monotony from the farmer's life and keep him busy, the weather is the mightiest and most uncertain. Since agriculture began, attempts have been made to control the weather, ranging from the most superstitious to the most carefully scientific. The anxiety for favorable weather has produced a great host who profess to be able to control the elements. That this species is not extinct is evidenced by the warning that the department of agriculture at Washington has found it necessary to issue to farmers.

Man has completely failed in his offensive war on the weather. Modern inventions, such as the airplane propeller on the 25-foot tower driving heated air over the trees through a funnel-shaped machine and shooting cannon at the sky, are as unsuccessful as the ancient tom-tom method. Only two methods of controlling the weather have thus far proved practicable, and they are both defensive measures, one against frost, the other against hail.

Burning from 50 to 100 small fires to an acre on a frosty night will heat the air sufficiently to save an orchard, as fruit growers in California have proved. And in 1896 an Austrian invented a cannon that will break up hailstorms by discharging heated gas, smoke, and smoke rings, and so disturbing the atmosphere that it forgets to hail. No other method is successful.

It is best to heed the government's warning. It is watching eagerly for new and successful methods, and if it finds any, it will share the discovery.

THE SOCIALIST SPEAKER

A number of people heard Emil Seidel, Socialist ex-Mayor of Milwaukee speak at Lyon's Park on Sunday at the county picnic. We heard him and can say without fear that we enjoy hearing a real dyed-in-the-wool Socialist make a speech. There is a satisfaction in knowing that he sincerely believes what he says and he isn't afraid to say he is a Socialist. Emil Seidel came out for government ownership of everything and stated honestly that Socialists believed in those propositions. He didn't varnish up a lot of vote getting bunk. Socialism isn't camouflage, it's out and out government ownership and operation of pretty nearly everything. While we may not agree with the Socialist theory of ownership, and disagree honorably and honestly, we are willing to recognize the honest Socialist with the same degree of sincerity of his purpose as we do the honest capitalist for his honorable methods.

MAKING THE WEATHER

Among all the forces that combine to drive the monotony from the farmer's life and keep him busy, the weather is the mightiest and most uncertain. Since agriculture began, attempts have been made to control the weather, ranging from the most superstitious to the most carefully scientific. The anxiety for favorable weather has produced a great host who profess to be able to control the elements. That this species is not extinct is evidenced by the warning that the department of agriculture at Washington has found it necessary to issue to farmers.

Man has completely failed in his offensive war on the weather. Modern inventions, such as the airplane propeller on the 25-foot tower driving heated air over the trees through a funnel-shaped machine and shooting cannon at the sky, are as unsuccessful as the ancient tom-tom method. Only two methods of controlling the weather have thus far proved practicable, and they are both defensive measures, one against frost, the other against hail.

Burning from 50 to 100 small fires to an acre on a frosty night will heat the air sufficiently to save an orchard, as fruit growers in California have proved. And in 1896 an Austrian invented a cannon that will break up hailstorms by discharging heated gas, smoke, and smoke rings, and so disturbing the atmosphere that it forgets to hail. No other method is successful.

It is best to heed the government's warning. It is watching eagerly for new and successful methods, and if it finds any, it will share the discovery.

THE SOCIALIST SPEAKER

A number of people heard Emil Seidel, Socialist ex-Mayor of Milwaukee speak at Lyon's Park on Sunday at the county picnic. We heard him and can say without fear that we enjoy hearing a real dyed-in-the-wool Socialist make a speech. There is a satisfaction in knowing that he sincerely believes what he says and he isn't afraid to say he is a Socialist. Emil Seidel came out for government ownership of everything and stated honestly that Socialists believed in those propositions. He didn't varnish up a lot of vote getting bunk. Socialism isn't camouflage, it's out and out government ownership and operation of pretty nearly everything. While we may not agree with the Socialist theory of ownership, and disagree honorably and honestly, we are willing to recognize the honest Socialist with the same degree of sincerity of his purpose as we do the honest capitalist for his honorable methods.

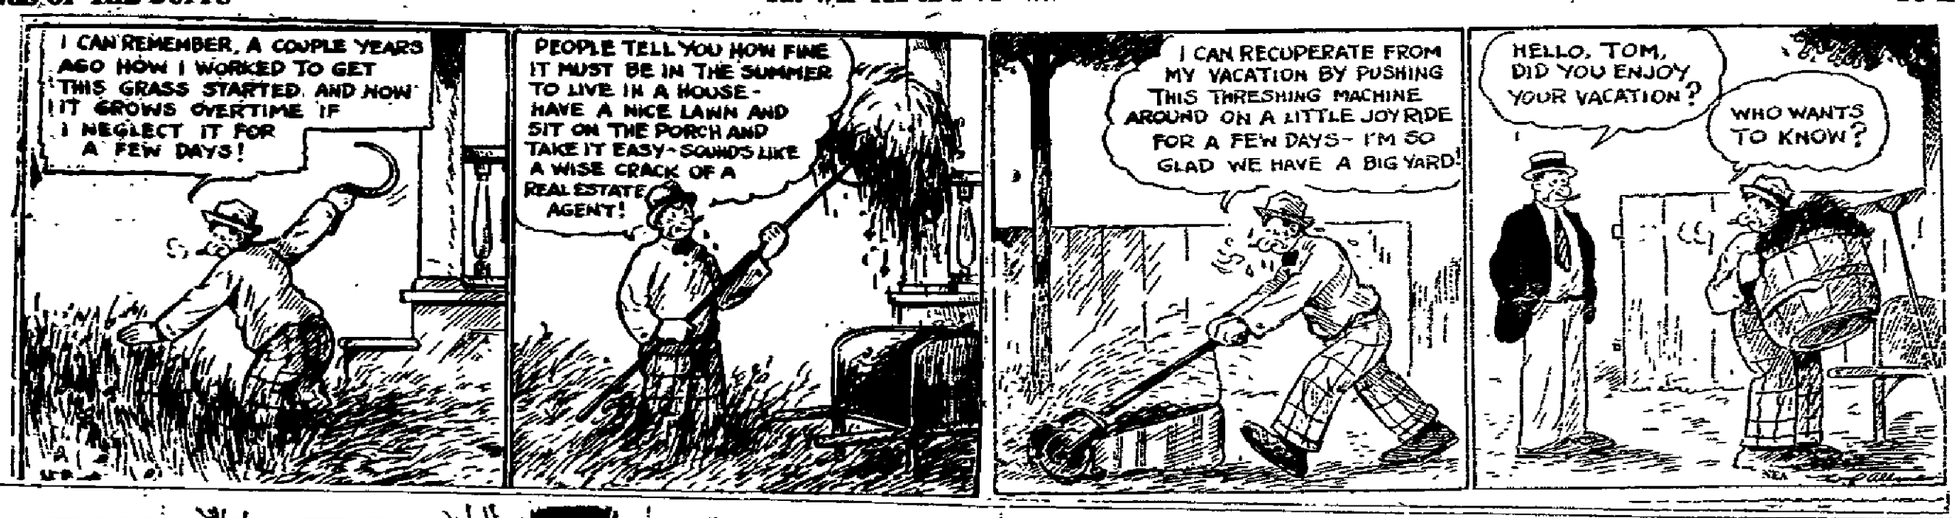
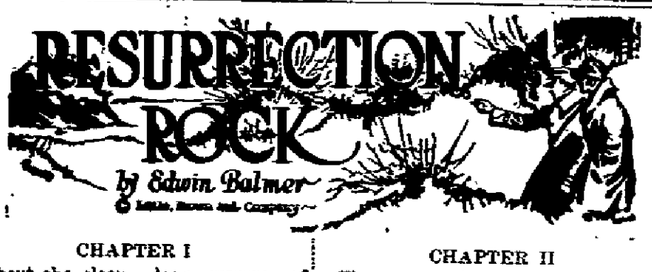
DOINGS OF THE DUFFS — The War Tax on a Vacation — BY ALLMAN





CHAPTER I

About the clear, deep waters of Lake Superior, and bounding the northern sands of Michigan, lies a realm of forest and of heights, rugged, wild, alluring—rich in copper and iron as are few other regions of the world. Kingdoms, which won wide influence, have owned far meaner materials of power; empire has warred with empire for stakes half as great.

In fact, France and her Indian allies long ago garrisoned forest stockades in war with England over this territory. England defended the region against the colonists.

But later the strength of the United States confined the struggle for possession to personal and individual combat of man against man—by right, by strength, by wit, by trick or by violence, open and secret—for the winning of power and wealth.

Here and there, where something had happened—for good or for evil—which a man might never forget, the ghosts drew back the living.

At least, men thus explained the return of Lucas Cullen to St. Florentin. Lucas, the younger of the two Cullen brothers, in 1896 suddenly appeared and, upon the site of the cabin where he and his wife lived when they founded St. Florentin and bossed the men building the first sawmill, he caused a new, enormous dwelling to be erected.

Lucas called this a summer cottage; and made it famous by bringing there for the summer the French nobleman, the Marquis de Chenal, "a friend of my daughter Cecilia." The Marquis so well liked Cecilia and liked the place—not to mention Lucas Cullen's millions that he remained at St. Florentin all summer.

He married Cecilia that winter and took her—together with a million or so of Michigan forest money—to his chateau in Touraine; and neither of them ever returned to the peninsula.

But Lucas and his wife and their younger daughter and their two sons came the next year; then Deborah married a westerner and moved to Wyoming. "Junior" Lucas and his brother John also married, and their wives preferred the more fashionable resorts of the east for the next summers.

So, at the turn of the century, old Lucas and his wife, were coming alone to the enormous frame house on the edge of the ruined old mill town above the shores of Lake Huron.

The real reason for Lucas' retreat from Chicago was his break with his brother John. They had always quarreled; but now they ceased to speak, and the same streets could not hold both.

The purpose of the builder of the other great house near St. Florentin was far more puzzling. The site was upon a tiny island in Lake Huron, half a mile from shore, a rocky, precipitous islet locally known as Resurrection Rock.

In the summer of 1912, barges appeared and anchored in the smooth water between Resurrection Rock and the shore; artisans of a dozen trades lived upon the barges while they erected a large, handsome house, chimneyed, wide of roof, graceful and pleasing.

But no master of the mansion appeared. Instead, the newly completed house was closed; doors locked and barred, windows soundly shuttered. A white farmer, who lived a mile or so away upon the opposite mainland, was entrusted with the keys and was paid to inspect the premises periodically. Yes; it was an ordinary enough house, he reported.

But, after a few inspections alone, he always took some one with him. Speculation and wonder in the neighborhood soon took weird and fantastic forms. Poor, pious people ceased to approach.

At first old Lucas Cullen laughed at the stories; but as time went on, they began to affect him.

The thing obsessed him. He was an old man now, over seventy, but hardy and strong, clear of eye, steady of hand, vindictive and merciless yet to all who opposed him. In all his long violent life, no one—and nothing—was known to have shaken him until some one, without reason, raised that house on the islet locally known as Resurrection Rock.

CHAPTER II

The express from Chicago for Lake Superior and Sault Sainte Marie—operated by the government upon this January day, 1919—was nearing Escanaba almost on time in spite of the difficulty of making steam against a north wind and in a night temperature of twenty-two below zero. On time was four-forty in the morning.

Ethel Carew was the whole name of the girl hidden by the curtains of lower four. She was a young lady of twenty-two now; but the porter, who had been on that "run" for many years, knew her when she was a child—a fair, violet-eyed, light-haired little girl from the west who traveled from Chicago with her uncles and aunts—Mr. and Mrs. John Cullen or Mr. and Mrs. Lucas Cullen—to visit her grandfather at St. Florentin.

She had no mother, it developed; and her father, for some reason, always was out home in Wyoming.

The porter tapped gently upon the wood partition at the head of lower four. The girl within, who had been lying awake, replied and instantly stirred herself. Whatever were her reflections and speculations, she dismissed them; and whereas she had scarcely been conscious of observing the lieutenant in section nine the evening before, this morning she noticed with interest that he also was getting up.

He was on his way home from France, she had heard him say last night in answer to a question.

The train was pulling into Escanaba now. The dark-haired young man, after a question to the brakeman, got down from the step and came forward near Ethel in search of the conductor.

"St. Florentin?" she heard the conductor repeat. "No; never heard of it."

"I can tell you about St. Florentin," she offered. "It's the name of an old mill town. It's near Quesnel; you take this train and get off there; then it's ten miles across country."

The young man bared his head, and his pleasant gray eyes lighted a little with excitement.

"You know it! Thank you!" he said. "That's just what I wanted to know."

"If you're going to St. Florentin," Ethel continued to volunteer impulsively, "you must be going to see my grandfather."

"Why?"

"Because he's the only man—except his servants—who lives there. It's a deserted village, except for his house."

"His name is Bagley?"

"No; Cullen—Lucas Cullen."

"Then there's no one named Bagley?—or Carew?"

Ethel started a little. "My name is Carew."

"It is! Then your father's there—or is going to be there, Miss Carew?"

"My father has not been in St. Florentine for more than twenty years," Ethel said. "And now—my father was with a regiment of engineers," she explained. "He was killed last June."

"I was stupid," he said, "thinking only about my affairs."

"You did not know about my father," Ethel returned in his defense.

"And there is a place called the Resurrection?"

"There's an island," Ethel said, "about half a mile off shore and not far from my grandfather's, called Resurrection Rock."

"There is, then!" he cried, this information amazingly stirring him.

He was breathing fast, she saw, as he gazed down at her; he opened his coat and was fumbling in an inner pocket when the call of the brakeman warned that the train was to start. He seized her arm to steady her while she ran; he half lifted her to the car step and swung on after her.

CHAPTER III

"Quesnel!" the brakeman called and Ethel stood up, buttoning her coat close to her throat. The dark-haired young man looked about interrogatively; she nodded, and he arose and also prepared to go out.

They stepped down upon the platform, and the train immediately puffed on.

"B'jou," said a middle-aged Indian to Ethel.

"Good morning, Asa," she hailed, offering her gloved hand.

"This is Asa Redbird," Ethel said to the soldier, "who lives near my grandfather and who is good enough to help us out sometimes."

"My name is Barney Loutrelle." The young man completed the introduction, speaking to the Indian as he offered his hand.

"Where you want to go?" the Indian asked with more interest.

"With us, Ass," Ethel supplied quickly. "Can you get him skis or shoes?"

"Yes," the Indian said. "You have these ones," he offered his skis. "Sled goes over to break road all way this afternoon. I come then."

"I seem to have selected you for my escort," Ethel said as they started out.

"How did you hear the name of my father, Mr. Loutrelle?" she asked when they had gone a short distance.

He thrust his hand into a side pocket and drew out a square, white envelope with English stamp and postmark and with the English strip—"Opened by the Censor." It was addressed to Barney Loutrelle, Lieutenant of Infantry in a certain American regiment in France.

He handed it to her.

Nov. 7, '18.

Dear Barney:

One named Philip Carew is here and keeps asking for you. Do you know him? He says you don't; but he knows you; or at least seems to have some mighty important business for you.

If this sweet little altercation ceases soon, I'd advise you to come and try to learn what he wants. If you can't, perhaps you can get him there—Philip Carew, the name. Try it and see.

Yours. Hus.

Ethel's breath stopped; she stood holding the letter with trembling hand while she examined the postmark which, like the date written upon the page, was November 7, 1918.

"My father!" she said. "He was killed in June!"

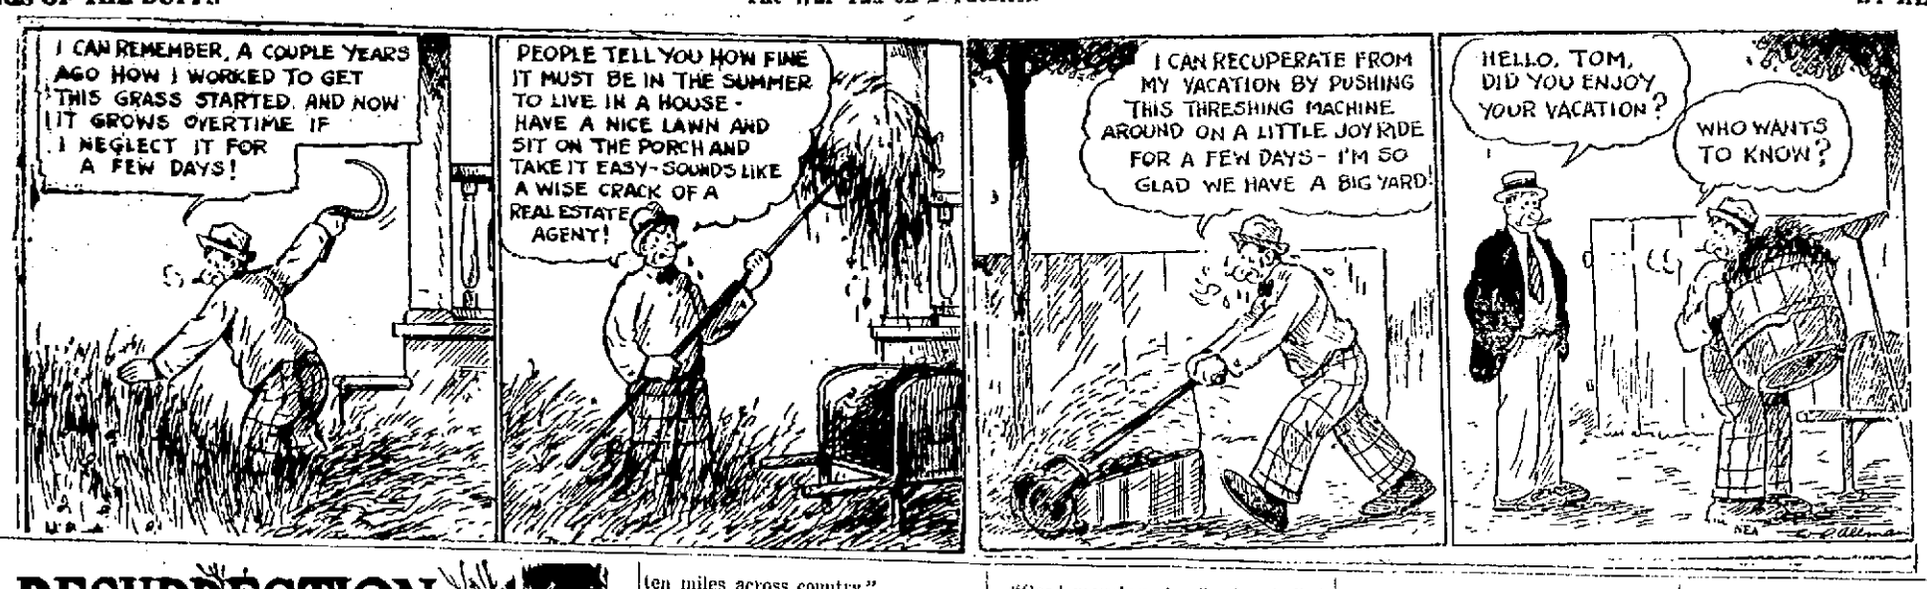
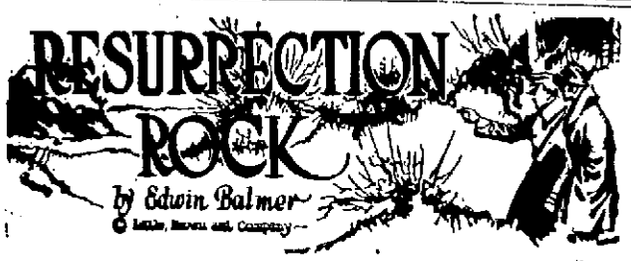
DOINGS OF THE DUFFS — The War Tax on a Vacation — BY ALLMAN





CHAPTER I

About the clear, deep waters of Lake Superior, and bounding the northern sands of Michigan, lies a realm of forest and of heights, rugged, wild, alluring—rich in copper and iron as are few other regions of the world. Kingdoms, which won wide influence, have owned far meaner materials of power; empire has warred with empire for stakes half as great.

In fact, France and her Indian allies long ago garrisoned forest stockades in war with England over this territory. England defended the region against the colonists.

But later the strength of the United States confined the struggle for possession to personal and individual combat of man against man—by right, by strength, by wit, by trick or by violence, open and secret—for the winning of power and wealth.

Here and there, where something had happened—for good or for evil—which a man might never forget, the ghosts drew back the living.

At least, men thus explained the return of Lucas Cullen to St. Florentin. Lucas, the younger of the two Cullen brothers, in 1896 suddenly appeared and, upon the site of the cabin where he and his wife lived when they founded St. Florentin and bossed the men building the first sawmill, he caused a new, enormous dwelling to be erected.

Lucas called this a summer cottage; and made it famous by bringing there for the summer the French nobleman, the Marquis de Chenal, "a friend of my daughter Cecilia." The Marquis so well liked Cecilia and liked the place—not to mention Lucas Cullen's millions that he remained at St. Florentin all summer.

He married Cecilia that winter and took her—together with a million or so of Michigan forest money—to his chateau in Touraine; and neither of them ever returned to the peninsula.

But Lucas and his wife and their younger daughter and their two sons came the next year; then Deborah married a westerner and moved to Wyoming. "Junior" Lucas and his brother John also married, and their wives preferred the more fashionable resorts of the east for the next summers.

So, at the turn of the century, old Lucas and his wife, were coming alone to the enormous frame house on the edge of the ruined old mill town above the shores of Lake Huron.

The real reason for Lucas' retreat from Chicago was his break with his brother John. They had always quarreled; but now they ceased to speak, and the same streets could not hold both.

The purpose of the builder of the other great house near St. Florentin was far more puzzling. The site was upon a tiny island in Lake Huron, half a mile from shore, a rocky, precipitous islet locally known as Resurrection Rock.

In the summer of 1912, barges appeared and anchored in the smooth water between Resurrection Rock and the shore; artisans of a dozen trades lived upon the barges while they erected a large, handsome house, chimneyed, wide of roof, graceful and pleasing.

But no master of the mansion appeared. Instead, the newly completed house was closed; doors locked and barred, windows soundly shuttered. A white farmer, who lived a mile or so away upon the opposite mainland, was entrusted with the keys and was paid to inspect the premises periodically. Yes; it was an ordinary enough house, he reported.

But, after a few inspections alone, he always took some one with him. Speculation and wonder in the neighborhood soon took weird and fantastic forms. Poor, pious people ceased to approach.

At first old Lucas Cullen laughed at the stories; but as time went on, they began to affect him.

The thing obsessed him. He was an old man now, over seventy, but hardy and strong, clear of eye, steady of hand, vindictive and merciless yet to all who opposed him. In all his long violent life, no one—and nothing—was known to have shaken him until some one, without reason, raised that house on the islet locally known as Resurrection Rock.

CHAPTER II

The express from Chicago for Lake Superior and Sault Sainte Marie—operated by the government upon this January day, 1919—was nearing Escanaba almost on time in spite of the difficulty of making steam against a north wind and in a night temperature of twenty-two below zero. On time was four-forty in the morning.

Ethel Carew was the whole name of the girl hidden by the curtains of lower four. She was a young lady of twenty-two now; but the porter, who had been on that "run" for many years, knew her when she was a child—a fair, violet-eyed, light-haired little girl from the west who traveled from Chicago with her uncles and aunts—Mr. and Mrs. John Cullen or Mr. and Mrs. Lucas Cullen—to visit her grandfather at St. Florentin.

She had no mother, it developed; and her father, for some reason, always was out home in Wyoming.

The porter tapped gently upon the wood partition at the head of lower four. The girl within, who had been lying awake, replied and instantly stirred herself. Whatever were her reflections and speculations, she dismissed them; and whereas she had scarcely been conscious of observing the lieutenant in section nine the evening before, this morning she noticed with interest that he also was getting up.

He was on his way home from France, she had heard him say last night in answer to a question.

The train was pulling into Escanaba now. The dark-haired young man, after a question to the brakeman, got down from the step and came forward near Ethel in search of the conductor.

"St. Florentin?" she heard the conductor repeat. "No; never heard of it."

"I can tell you about St. Florentin," she offered. "It's the name of an old mill town. It's near Quesnel; you take this train and get off there; then it's ten miles across country."

The young man bared his head, and his pleasant gray eyes lighted a little with excitement.

"You know it! Thank you!" he said. "That's just what I wanted to know."

"If you're going to St. Florentin," Ethel continued to volunteer impulsively, "you must be going to see my grandfather."

"Why?"

"Because he's the only man—except his servants—who lives there. It's a deserted village, except for his house."

"His name is Bagley?"

"No; Cullen—Lucas Cullen."

"Then there's no one named Bagley?—or Carew?"

Ethel started a little. "My name is Carew."

"It is! Then your father's there—or is going to be there, Miss Carew?"

"My father has not been in St. Florentine for more than twenty years," Ethel said. "And now—my father was with a regiment of engineers," she explained. "He was killed last June."

"I was stupid," he said, "thinking only about my affairs."

"You did not know about my father," Ethel returned in his defense.

"And there is a place called the Resurrection?"

"There's an island," Ethel said, "about half a mile off shore and not far from my grandfather's, called Resurrection Rock."

"There is, then!" he cried, this information amazingly stirring him.

He was breathing fast, she saw, as he gazed down at her; he opened his coat and was fumbling in an inner pocket when the call of the brakeman warned that the train was to start. He seized her arm to steady her while she ran; he half lifted her to the car step and swung on after her.

CHAPTER III

"Quesnel!" the brakeman called and Ethel stood up, buttoning her coat close to her throat. The dark-haired young man looked about interrogatively; she nodded, and he arose and also prepared to go out.

They stepped down upon the platform, and the train immediately puffed on.

"B'jou," said a middle-aged Indian to Ethel.

"Good morning, Asa," she hailed, offering her gloved hand.

"This is Asa Redbird," Ethel said to the soldier, "who lives near my grandfather and who is good enough to help us out sometimes."

"My name is Barney Loutrelle." The young man completed the introduction, speaking to the Indian as he offered his hand.

"Where you want to go?" the Indian asked with more interest.

"With us, Asa," Ethel supplied quickly. "Can you get him skis or shoes?"

"Yes," the Indian said. "You have these ones," he offered his skis. "Sled goes over to break road all way this afternoon. I come then."

"I seem to have selected you for my escort," Ethel said as they started out.

"How did you hear the name of my father, Mr. Loutrelle?" she asked when they had gone a short distance.

He thrust his hand into a side pocket and drew out a square, white envelope with English stamp and postmark and with the English strip—"Opened by the Censor." It was addressed to Barney Loutrelle, Lieutenant of Infantry in a certain American regiment in France.

He handed it to her.

Nov. 7, '18.

Dear Barney:

One named Philip Carew is here and keeps asking for you. Do you know him? He says you don't; but he knows you; or at least seems to have some mighty important business for you.

If this sweet little altercation ceases soon, I'd advise you to come and try to learn what he wants. If you can't, perhaps you can get him there—Philip Carew, the name. Try it and see.

Yours, Hus.

Ethel's breath stopped; she stood holding the letter with trembling hand while she examined the postmark which, like the date written upon the page, was November 7, 1918.

"My father!" she said. "He was killed in June!"

Weddings

ARPIN—BEEMAN

The home of Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Arpin, 375 Drake street, presented a brilliant scene, Tuesday evening when their daughter, Cecile was wedded to Lyman Beeman of Neenah, son of Mrs. E. M. Beeman of that city. At eight o'clock the wedding party entered the living room to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, Mrs. Isaac P. Witter, preiding at the piano. The bridal party was led by Rev. Raymond Herron, Rector of St. Thomas Episcopal Church of Neenah who used the double ring service. Next came Lawrence Arpin, nephew of the bride, carrying the wedding ring on a white satin pillow. He was followed by the two little flower girls, Julie Jenkins and Mary Ellen Daly, who strewed the bridal pathway with flowers from baskets tied with white tulle. Little Miss Jenkins was gowned in pink taffeta and little Miss Daly was gowned in yellow taffetta. Next came Master Jack Davies, the bride's cousin carrying a white satin pillow.

The maid of honor, Miss Helen Conway, was the next to follow. She wore a pink taffeta gown, and carried an arm bouquet of roses and sweet peas. The last to enter was the bride on the arm of her father, who gave her away. Her wedding gown was of silver lace and white chiffon over cloth of silver. Her veil of white tulle ending in a long train, and caught with a band of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white roses showered with pink and white sweet peas. The bride and her party were met by the groom and Charles Culbertson, bestman of Stanley, Wisconsin.

The house was a bower of beauty, with its banks and large bouquets of fall flowers. Nearly one hundred guests were present at the ceremony. After which the troths had been plighted, and the couple were showered with congratulations, dancing was enjoyed for a time, and later refreshments were served in the dining room. The table decorations were red and white, a beautiful center piece, being a large bouquet of red dahlias, silver candles sticks with red dahlias, silver candle sticks with of the table.

The bride is one of Wisconsin Rapids popular young ladies. She was born and brought up in this city, and is a graduate of Lincoln High school, and also graduated at Smith college, at North Hampton, Mass. The past year she taught history in the Appleton high school.

The groom is not an entire stranger here, having visited this city on several occasions. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin. During the late war he served as munition inspector at Boston, Mass. He is employed by the Kimberly-Clark Paper Co. of Appleton in the technical department.

THEATRES

"A PRINCE THERE WAS"

—Thomas Meighan, Paramount star is supported by Mildred Harris, former Lois Webber star, in his new starring vehicle "A Prince There Was" which comes to the Palace theatre today and tomorrow.

Mr. Meighan puts over some strong emotional acting in this screen adaptation of the famous George M. Cohan stage success, and Mildred Harris is a most capable leading woman. Mr. Meighan plays a rich young idler and Miss Harris a young writer, who formerly lived in luxury but with her father's ruin and suicide is forced to write for a meagre living, with poor success. Little Charlote Jackson in the role of the little boarding house drudge, goes to the rich man and asks him to "intercede" for the girl, which the rich man does, pretending he is an assistant magazine editor and taking up quarters at the boarding house, where he soon falls in love with the girl.

But a broker, also in love with the girl, makes it appear that the prince was the man who caused her father's financial ruin and also exposes the fact that he had to buy the magaine to get her stories printed. This causes an estrangement, which however is speedily patched up by turn of circumstances and everybody is happy at the finish.

Other players of note in the cast are Nigel Barrie, Guy Oliver, Slyvia Ashton, Fred Huntly and Arthur Hull. The picture was adapted by Waldemar Young and directed by Tom Forman.

IDEAL THEATRE

The cast is well balanced all thru and the story is mighty good, with alternating humor and pathed patrons of the discriminating type will find much to please in this offering and the theatre should be accorded a capacity house. The picture will be presented in the Gruwell style with the Wisconsin Rapids Quintette, in charge of Mrs. Nettie B. Wegg furnishing the musical accompainment. The Ideal's own news reel, shown in celebration with the Daily Tribune will be the curtain raiser and a unique stunt has been added in the prize offered to boys to imitate Jackie Coogan.

ARPIN—BEEMAN

The home of Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Arpin, 375 Drake street, presented a brilliant scene, Tuesday evening when their daughter, Cecile was wedded to Lyman Beeman of Neenah, son of Mrs. E. M. Beeman of that city. At eight o'clock the wedding party entered the living room to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, Mrs. Isaac P. Witter, preiding at the piano. The bridal party was led by Rev. Raymond Herron, Rector of St. Thomas Episcopal Church of Neenah who used the double ring service. Next came Lawrence Arpin, nephew of the bride, carrying the wedding ring on a white satin pillow. He was followed by the two little flower girls, Julie Jenkins and Mary Ellen Daly, who strewed the bridal pathway with flowers from baskets tied with white tulle. Little Miss Jenkins was gowned in pink taffeta and little Miss Daly was gowned in yellow taffetta. Next came Master Jack Davies, the bride's cousin carrying a white satin pillow.

The maid of honor, Miss Helen Conway, was the next to follow. She wore a pink taffeta gown, and carried an arm bouquet of roses and sweet peas. The last to enter was the bride on the arm of her father, who gave her away. Her wedding gown was of silver lace and white chiffon over cloth of silver. Her veil of white tulle ending in a long train, and caught with a band of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white roses showered with pink and white sweet peas. The bride and her party were met by the groom and Charles Culbertson, bestman of Stanley, Wisconsin.

The house was a bower of beauty, with its banks and large bouquets of fall flowers. Nearly one hundred guests were present at the ceremony. After which the troths had been plighted, and the couple were showered with congratulations, dancing was enjoyed for a time, and later refreshments were served, in the dining room. The table decorations were red and white, a beautiful center piece, being a large bouquet of red dahlias, silver candles sticks with red dahlias, silver candle sticks with of the table.

The bride is one of Wisconsin Rapids popular young ladies. She was born and brought up in this city, and is a graduate of Lincoln High school, and also graduated at Smith college at North Hampton, Mass. The past year she taught history in the Appleton high school.

How many yards of yarn in the Big Sweater Coat

Take a look at the big sweater coat now on display in the window of Fridstein, Inc. The coat is a monster—nine feet eleven inches from "tip to tip", sixty-six inches long, eighty-four inches around the chest—a sweater big enuf for a giant!

Sweater
Coat
FREE

It's knit of pure wool yarn, weighs—but that would be giving you a clue. The question about it is this—HOW MANY YARDS OF YARN WERE USED IN KNITTING IT? The yarn used in the sleeves, for example, would make sweaters for three ordinary men. The yarn used in the pockets alone would make sweaters for three children: and the yarn in the colalr would make a couple of ladies sweaters.

We want you to make a guess according to the plan noted in our display window. The sweater coat will be on display at Fridstein's, all this week, and at FRIDSTEIN-ANDERSON CO. for one week beginning September 12th. At the end of that time the person who has made the nearest correct estimate as to the number of feet, yards or miles, of yarn in the coat, will be given a $6.00 sweater free of all charge. A sweater coat will be given away at each store for the nearest correct guess made. One guess with each purchase of 50c or over.

How many yards of yarn in the Big Sweater Coat

Take a look at the big sweater coat now on display in the window of Fridstein, Inc. The coat is a monster—nine feet eleven inches from "tip to tip", sixty-six inches long, eighty-four inches around the chest—a sweater big enuf for a giant!

Nearest Correct GUESS Wins a new Sweater Coat FREE

It's knit of pure wool yarn, weighs—but that would be giving you a clue. The question about it is this—HOW MANY YARDS OF YARN WERE USED IN KNITTING IT? The yarn used in the sleeves, for example, would make sweaters for three ordinary men. The yarn used in the pockets alone would make sweaters for three children; and the yarn in the colalr would make a couple of ladies sweaters.

We want you to make a guess according to the plan noted in our display window. The sweater coat will be on display at Fridstein's, all this week, and at FRIDSTEIN-ANDERSON CO. for one week beginning September 12th. At the end of that time the person who has made the nearest correct estimate as to the number of feet, yards or miles, of yarn in the coat, will be given a $6.00 sweater free of all charge. A sweater coat will be given away at each store for the nearest correct guess made. One guess with each purchase of 50c or over.

QUALITY & SERVICE "Where Low Prices Prevail" LOWEST PRICES

"Business, Like John Brown's Body, Goes Marching On."

Your dollar and our dollar has come into its own. Today there is no further question of fairness of price—we have bought our stocks on what we consider a very fair basis and you may rest assured that they will be turned over to you with our usual low margin of profit.

Through those seasons when prices were soaring and wholesalers were shipping to the highest bidders, we fought over every inch of the ground to try and maintain your trade and your good will—not by taking advantage of your needs and the higher prices you were receiving for your products or your service, but by a very EARNEST endeavor to maintain quality at a fair price.

We were the first to offer our merchandise at receeding prices, preferirng to accept many losses rather than hold up our customers, as many stores and mail-order houses did.

The ever increasing number of new faces we see in this store each day is the best indication in the world that the policies we pursued during good times and depressions, were policies that made friends and established for all time to come that the purpose of this store is to SERVE and SAVE—to MAKE FRIENDS and HOLD THEM—to build for a future that will bring its own reward in added confidence in our dealings with the public.

Nothing will harm an institution more, nor send it down hill more rapidly than to lose, by selfish policies, the friends and customers of years standing. May we seek your trade on the broad plan of service, which includes every FAIR and HONORABLE METHOD known to retailing. BUSINESS IS MARCHING ON IN THIS STORE.

RADIO
BY FRANK CHAPMAN

Detector. The waves sent out by a station consist of electromagnetic waves of very high frequency, known as radio frequency. They vibrate so fast that the human eye cannot detect them.

The detector performs this function and changes them into what is termed audio frequency. In other words they are made audible to you.

The action of the detector is as follows: The crystals used have the characteristic of allowing current to flow in one direction only. Wireless signals are oscillating or alternating current. The detector will only allow one-half of the cycle to pass through, this current acts on the telephones and creates a sound, which is either dots, dashes or spoken words.

There are no hard and fast rules in making up a detector but two things are necessary. You must have some means of holding the crystal and a device to hold and move the fine wire known as the cat whisker, so that it can touch most any spot on the crystal. This is necessary as the crystal is more sensitive in some places than others.

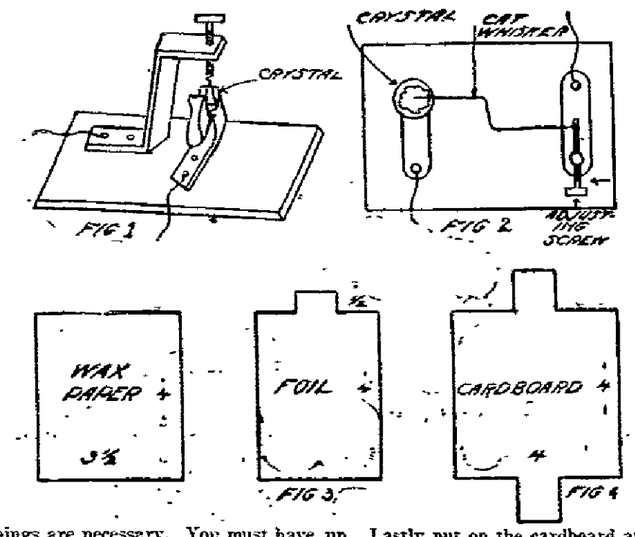
To make up a crystal detector use a piece of wood 4x2x1-2 inches for the base, a battery clip to hold the crystal, a brass strip about half an inch wide and four inches long, a machine screw and a piece of bronze wire. Bore holes in the brass strip, one to fasten it to the base and the other for the machine screw which has the bronze wire soldered on the end of it to act as the cat whisker. Mount them as shown in fig. 1.

You can also make your detector along the lines of fig. 2.

One wire is connected to the crystal via the holder, the other wire to the stand for the cat whisker.

Fixed condenser. These are called telephone condensers as they are shunted around the telephones. They can be purchased very cheaply but some people want a home made set and for those I am giving the following data.

You will require the following: A piece of wood about the thickness of a cigar box and 4x6 inches, 2 pieces of heavy cardboard 6x4 inches, 9 pieces of waxed paper 3 1-2x4 inches, 8 pieces of tin foil 3x4 1-2 inches, 2 binding posts, 4 washers to fit them. Cut the tin foil as shown in fig. 3, cut the cardboard as shown in fig. 4, and proceed to assemble as follows: Place a piece of cardboard on the wooden base, then a piece of waxed paper, next a piece of foil with the lug projecting on one end, then another piece of waxed paper, another piece of foil BUT have the lug project from the opposite end this time. Continue putting on alternate layers of paper and foil until they are used up. Lastly put on the cardboard and clamp them together in a vice. It is important that when the foil is put on the waxed sheet that all wrinkles or bubbles be removed. This can be done with a spoon or any smooth instrument.



After you have clamped the units together, bore a hole through the cardboard and wood through all the lugs on one end and put one of the binding posts through it. Do the same with the other end. Fasten them on tightly as it is necessary that the condenser be tight. You can fasten rubber bands or string across the middle of it to be positive it is tight.

Test this condenser by putting it in series with a bell or buzzer circuit. If the buzzer sounds you have not condensed it up properly, alternate pieces of foil are touching somewhere. Reassemble.

Connect up the entire set as shown in article 1. You are now ready to receive music, etc. Tune slowly for best results.

QUALITY & SERVICE "Where Low Prices Prevail" LOWEST PRICES

"Business, Like John Brown's Body, Goes Marching On."

Your dollar and our dollar has come into its own. Today there is no further question of fairness of price—we have bought our stocks on what we consider a very fair basis and you may rest assured that they will be turned over to you with our usual low margin of profit.

Through those seasons when prices were soaring and wholesalers were shipping to the highest bidders, we fought over every inch of the ground to try and maintain your trade and your good will—not by taking advantage of your needs and the higher prices you were receiving for your products or your service, but by a very EARNEST endeavor to maintain quality at a fair price.

We were the first to offer our merchandise at receeding prices, preferirng to accept many losses rather than hold up our customers, as many stores and mail-order houses did.

The ever increasing number of new faces we see in this store each day is the best indication in the world that the policies we pursued during good times and depressions, were policies that made friends and established for all time to come that the purpose of this store is to SERVE and SAVE—to MAKE FRIENDS and HOLD THEM—to build for a future that will bring its own reward in added confidence in our dealings with the public.

Nothing will harm an institution more, nor send it down hill more rapidly than to lose, by selfish policies, the friends and customers of years standing. May we seek your trade on the broad plan of service, which includes every FAIR and HONORABLE METHOD known to retailing. BUSINESS IS MARCHING ON IN THIS STORE.

RADIO

BY FRANK CHAPMAN

Detector. The waves sent out by a station consist of electromagnetic waves of very high frequency, known as radio frequency. They vibrate so fast that the human eye cannot detect them.

The detector performs this function and changes them into what is termed audio frequency. In other words they are made audible to you.

The action of the detector is as follows: The crystals used have the characteristic of allowing current to flow in one direction only. Wireless signals are oscillating or alternating current. The detector will only allow one-half of the cycle to pass through, this current acts on the telephones and creates a sound, which is either dots, dashes or spoken words.

There are no hard and fast rules in making up a detector but two things are necessary. You must have some means of holding the crystal and a device to hold and move the fine wire known as the cat whisker, so that it can touch most any spot on the crystal. This is necessary as the crystal is more sensitive in some places than others.

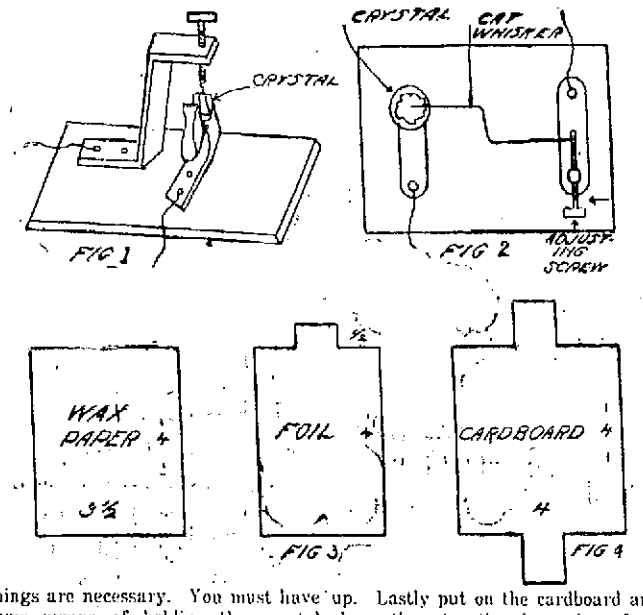
To make up a crystal detector use a piece of wood 4x2x1-2 inches for the base, a battery clip to hold the crystal, a brass strip about half an inch wide and four inches long, a machine screw and a piece of bronze wire. Bore holes in the brass strip, one to fasten it to the base and the other for the machine screw which has the bronze wire soldered on the end of it to act as the cat whisker. Mount them as shown in fig. 1.

You can also make your detector along the lines of fig. 2.

One wire is connected to the crystal via the holder, the other wire to the stand for the cat whisker.

Fixed condenser. These are called telephone condensers as they are shunted around the telephones. They can be purchased very cheaply but some people want a home made set and for those I am giving the following data.

You will require the following: A piece of wood about the thickness of a cigar box and 4x6 inches, 2 pieces of heavy cardboard 6x4 inches, 9 pieces of waxed paper 3 1-2x4 inches, 8 pieces of tin foil 3x4 1-2 inches, 2 binding posts, 4 washers to fit them. Cut the tin foil as shown in fig. 3, cut the cardboard as shown in fig. 4, and proceed to assemble as follows: Place a piece of cardboard on the wooden base, then a piece of waxed paper, next a piece of foil with the lug projecting on one end, then another piece of waxed paper, another piece of foil BUT have the lug project from the opposite end this time. Continue putting on alternate layers of paper and foil until they are used up. Lastly put on the cardboard and clamp them together in a vice. It is important that when the foil is put on the waxed sheet that all wrinkles or bubbles be removed. This can be done with a spoon or any smooth instrument.



After you have clamped the units together, bore a hole through the cardboard and wood through all the lugs on one end and put one of the binding posts through it. Do the same with the other end. Fasten them on tightly as it is necessary that the condenser be tight. You can fasten rubber bands or string across the middle of it to be positive it is tight.

Test this condenser by putting it in series with a bell or buzzer circuit. If the buzzer sounds you have not condensed it up properly, alternate pieces of foil are touching somewhere. Reassemble.

The Tecktonius Silo

One heard a great deal about the "Farmer's Friend." Some of them may really be your friends and some may be playing the "Friendship" racket just in order to get votes and help them in their political aspirations.

But one thing is sure!

One of the best friends a farmer has is a Tecktonius Silo.

It protects and insures you against unjust discrimation of the weather.

It serves you not only for one year but every year.

It increases the value of your corn crop.

It reduces your mortgage and helps pay your taxes.

It helps increase your interest in dairying and give your children a better education.

We have a number of these "Farmer's Friends" on hand. Call and see us about one now. You will soon need it.
